

The copper is impregnated with a double layer of H class insulating enamel to ensure high resistance to electrical, thermal and mechanical stress. The phases are further isolated by another layer of Nomex film to protect the motors from the voltage peaks that usually occur when the motor is controlled by an inverter.